on the Fradshaw mountain railroad, is not passable.

There is a big dump at the Tin Top, the tungsten ore having been thrown aside as waste in the old days when that was one of Arisona's leading silver producers. Exploration of the old workings as far down as the 290 foot level has diviosed much ore of even higher grade than that on the dump.

Gold builton is now reaching Prescott from the old Monica mine, near Kirkland. W. W. Copp is now the sole owher of the Monica and in the few mouths that it has been operated under his direction no less than 15,000 tons of ore his been developed. Most of this is on the 800 foot and 700 foot levels, and it averages better than $15 a ton. Copp has installed a mill and cranide plant.

The main shaft at the Bonnie mine has been retimbered to a depth of 50 feet and it is expected that it will be in the producing class shortly.

Advices from Jerome are that the nerial tram from the United Verde Extension mine to the Verde Tunnel railroad, 4400 feet distant, is practically completed. When it is piaced in operation the production of the U. V. Extension will be greatly increased as the necessity of packing ore on mules to the railroad will be eliminated.

From the cigar-stand they selected a cigarest box of startling yellow. At half a mile it was conspicuous.

"When you see this in the road," explained Rumson, "you'll know we're on the job. And after you're inside, if you need us, you've only to go to a rear window and wate."

"If they mean to de him up," Browled Blassil, "he won't get to a rear window."

"He can always tell them we're outside," said Rumson—"and they are extremely likely to believe him. Do you want a gun?"

"No," said the D, A.

"Better have mine," urged Hewitt.

"I have my own," explained the D, A.

Bumson and Hewitt set off in taxicabs and, a half-hour later, Wharton followed. As he sank back asainst the cushions of the big touring car he felt a pleasing thrill of excitement, and as he pleasing thrill of excitement, and as he pleasing thrill of excitement, and as he pleasing thrill of excitement, and they saluted mechanically, he smiled half they guessed his etrand their interest in his progress would have been less perfunctory. In half an hour he might knew that the police killed Hanf, half an hour he himself might walk into a trap they had, in turn riaged for him. As the car ran swiftly through the clean October air, and the wind and sun afternately chilled and warmed his bleed, Wharton considered these possibilities.

He could not believe the woman Earle would lend herself to any plot to do him bedily harm. She was a responsible person. In her own world she was as important a figure as was the district attorney in his. Her allies were the men 'higher up' in Tammany and the police of the upper ranks of the uniformed force. And of the higher office of the district attorney she possessed an intimate and respectful knowledge. It was not to be considered that against the prosecuting attorney such a woman would wage war. So the thought that upon his person any assault was mediated Wharson any assault was mediated Wharson any assault was mediated wharson dismissed as unintelligent. That it was upon his reputation the attack was planned seemed much more probable. But that contingency he had foreseen and so, he believed, forestailed. There then remained only the possibility that the offer in the letter was genuine. It seemed quite too good to be true. For, as he asked himself, on the very eye of an election, why should Tammany, or a friend of Tammany in the promise to tell him who killed There then remained to the information that to the Tammany candidate would be hoped. The object was, to sead him into a trap, of all baits they might use the promise to tell him who killed fand was the one offer not genuine, th

CHAPTER X.

THE long evening ended at last, and Augustus Reeves suggested with at yawn that he "guessed he'd best be going."
Jane, who in the shadow of the homeysuckle had sat quietly, with half-closed eyes, became wide awake at this remark. Reeves and her mother had carried on most of the conversation since supper, Eara Hardy, who before supper had had a talk with an agustus, was more silent than usual, and Jane wondered whether he and his guest had had some discussion that had disturbed the host's mind.

Then she asked herself what topic could possibly concern both men smoogh to worry her father—after with Augustus Reeves, No wonder Ned regarded Reeves with contempt for the farmer certainly was a bore. Yet now hard her mother was exerting herself to entertain him; Could she possibly like him as much as she seemed fer.

When her reflections had reached this point, they became hard. The
